Dangers in Bringing up Children.

The cruelty done to c lidten by some parents, as well as by teachers, is indescribable. Childreu are held to be of the same temperament, of the same adaptability to learn as their parents and teachers; yet the boy who cannot learn his lessons as quickly as another is thrashed, or he is degraded in some way. Grown people forget the intense misery to which children are thus exposed. The child's horizon is so limited that he sees no remedy to his woes, and his sorrow atsorbs bis whole little being.

"Fathers, provoke not your chi'den to wrath, lest they be discouraged." If the life of a child be embittered, the result is shyness and secret aversion. Even a child feels itself wronged, and a serse of bitterness is implanted in its heart. We osn never think without a pity of a parent who lost a promising son by death, and was hancied through life by his parental severity. "My boy," he said to a friend, "used to think me cruel, and he had too much reason to do st; but he did not know how I loved him at the pottom of my heart; and now it is too late !"

We often thick when we hear of parents beating their children that they should rather be efficing the punishment upon themselves. They have been the means of bringing into being the interitors of their own moral nature. The child does not make his own temper; nor has at y control while a child over its direction. If the parents have conferred an irritable temper on the child, it is a duty on their part to exer cisa the control, forbearance, and patience, so that the influence of daily life may, in the course of time, correct and modify the defects of its birth.

But the "chila's will must be broken! There is no greater fallacy than this. Will forms the foundation of character, Without strength of will there will be no strength of purpose. What is necessary is not to break the child's will, but to educate it is proper directions; and this is not to be done through the agency of force or fear, A thousand instances might be cited in proof of this statement.

When the perent or teacher relies chiefly upon pain for controlling the child's will, the child sensibly associates duty and obedience with far and terror. And when you have thus as-coated command over the will of others with pain, you have done all you could to lay the foundations of a bad Character—a bad son, a bad bueband, a bad father, a bad neighbor, and a bad citizes. Parents may not think of this when they are beating into their child en their own faults; but it is true nevertheless. There is no doubt that the comman i over the wills of others by pain leads by degrees to all the several stages of irritation, injustice, cruelty, oppress on and tyranuy.

When Euffordius, of Cologne, heard a great cry leauing from a school house he opened the door, ent-red, and rushed up like a lion, and, raising his staff against the tracher and his as salatt delivered the boy from their hands.

"What are you doing tyrant?' he said, "you are placed here to teach, not to kill scholars.—
Samuel Smiles. "Duty." A Lest Civilization -Sir William Jones,

in his voyage to lades, found in the island of Johanne, a secluded speck in the Atlantic off the coast of Afric, this inscription in Arabic. above the door or a mosque: The world was given for our edification;

Not for the purpose of raising sumptuous dweilings; Lite for the discharge of moral and religious

Weakin to be liberally bestowed; Not avarciously hearded; And tearning to produce good actions,

And not emety disputes. The people who were guided by those maxima, if my people ever were, certainly exhibited a high degree of civil z tion. It seems a great misfortune that they should have perirhed from the earth. Yet if such a race existed now, and they possessed a country worth anything, some Anglo Saxon race would kill them off, or drive them out, and take possession of their lands and whatever clee they might have worth stealing.
